Some Help With

How to Resolve AnyDesk's 'Free License' Banner for Non-Professional Users

If you're a non-professional user of AnyDesk, it's understandable to feel frustrated upon encountering the red banner that states, "Free License (non-professional use). Get a trial license or purchase online." Many users have reported experiencing this same inconvenience, especially those who use the service occasionally or sporadically.

It's essential to note that AnyDesk has implemented a validation system to ensure that the application is used in accordance with its terms. This may include the need to opt for a whitelisting process, which allows legitimate users to continue using the software without interruptions. If you have received disconnection notifications or are facing this banner, it's advisable to fill out the whitelisting form. Some users have found that this step helps them avoid these annoying messages and connect more seamlessly.

Remember, if you are strictly a personal user, this process is crucial for maintaining your AnyDesk experience without the constant nuisance of the banner. After filling out the form, the response may vary, but many users report having successfully resolved their situation.

In conclusion, if you see the banner, consider the whitelisting option and ensure that your use of AnyDesk clearly aligns with its non-professional usage policy. This will allow you to continue enjoying the benefits of remote access software without interruptions.